OFFICE OF INFORMATION

Suggested List of Speakers on The Famine Emergency

Following is a list of public officials and private citizens who are familiar with various phases of the food emergency and who might be obtained as speakers for importance meetings on the general subject of the world famine, what is being done about it, and what still remains to be done.

Not all of these persons have indicated their availability for speaking engagements generally, so that arrangements must be made with them individually for specific occasions.

Naturally, good judgment should be exercised in requesting speakers, according to the type of meeting or gathering to be addressed. All of them are busy and many of them are donating their time and expenses for travel to the famine campaign. In general, it is suggested that nationally prominent figures and government executives be called on only for the most important national gatherings or for major events near their homes, and that for other occasions of more localized significance, speakers be obtained from the immediate vicinity.

In every State, the State Emergency Food Program Manager is the State Director of the Production and Marketing Administration, U. S. Department of Agriculture. In virtually every county, the County Emergency Food Program Manager is the chairman of the County Agricultural Conservation Committee. Through these officers State and local speakers may be obtained.
